Two picturesque young men were brought to the Paris jail last week. One was an Indian known as Chief Wingo, and the other a white man, Alton Inman. The first of these men has been camping in various parts of Oxford County for a year or so, and claims to be an Indian doctor, and at times seems to have had quite a tribe with him. He and his followers are picturesque characters, dressed by broad-brimmed sombreros and wearing a bright colored Navajo blanket in a jaunty manner over their shoulders. They roamed the country about on ratty borse with Mexican saddles and chaps. The white man was brought to the jail to serve a sentence of two months imposed by the municipal court at Rumford for passing young Mexico girls to their camp in Dixfield for immoral purposes; and the Indian is here for failure to pay $3000 bonds for appearance at the October term of the supreme judicial court for the same offense.

True and False Economy.

Just where the line shall be drawn between what is real and what is questionable economy cannot be definitely decided by any one not conversant with all of the circumstances of each case, but it is quite probable that in nine out of every ten homes, there are many things being done religiously every day under the firm conviction that they are economical, therefore to be followed.

Obit among the failings of the housewife, who wastes part of their time in the activities of a so-called economy, is the fact that they think a thing costs nothing, if it requires only time.

"Only time." And time is one of the most precious things in the world, certainly for the housewife who has a thousand and one things demanding her attention. She must conserve her strength, and be mentally fresh to enjoy the end of the day with her family. How can she, unless she puts some value on her time, and spends it as carefully as she does her money?

The make-over habit is probably as great a thief of time as any other. When a garment will require half an hour to mend, and then will wear only a day or so, when stocking darning consumes the greater part of an afternoon each week, when, after all the time used in constructing some homemade article, it is not so good as one only dressed for a quarter, then the saving is false.

How many women buy new materials to combine with old for a dress that will be only a made over when completed? Then, since the old wears out before the new, something else must often be used with it, and the whole story is complicated indefinitely. How infinitely better it would be to make over for a child the garment of which only part is good, and to invest in a whole new dress, and incidentally, in self-confidence, and the well dressed feeling which every woman should have.

What is really needed is the fine sense of values that cannot be developed, sometimes, unless one stands off at the side, figuratively speaking, and looks at the activities of the home with an unbiased view. Then, and only then, unexpended wastes in strength and time may be discovered and remedied.

Do you take time to cut from reused envelopes the little gummed strip and save it for future use? Or do you have a roll of gummed paper tape, always the same width, and of whose adhesive qualities you may be certain, and which may be purchased for a few cents? Which, for the busy mother, do you think most economical?

Do you save bits of string, tie them together, and then enclose several knots when a long strip is wanted? Or do you have a stout ball of twine, which cost perhaps ten cents, where you can always have just the length you want? Perhaps, just perhaps, the first method is real economy in some cases, but it is doubtful.

Are you one of those home-makers who economize by using paper napkins, when just the family is present? Do you, as one woman suggested, put warmed-over dishes on the table in the kitchen, and then carry them to the dining room? When children notice that there are such things as home and company manners and customs, and that they have been better to have the ways of the family about such things than they would be acceptable for any guest?

Such things must be decided by the individual. No one outside the family circle can judge, not knowing all the details, but it might be well to stop and give the matter a little thought.

Glass in the Kitchen. Glass, shining and clear, may make housework much easier, in many homes, if it is just given a chance. Of course, we think of glass everywhere first in this connection because of the ease with which we may see the condition of whatever food is being baked. For anything requiring long, slow baking, such as roasting, bread pudding, casserole dishes and many others. Then glass is ideal, since it may be used later on the table.

Perhaps none the less helpful is the glass over door, through which everything may be seen, and by which many a baking failure may be avoided, when the draft of cold air might be disastrous to the sensitive soufflé, or meringue.

Now must we forget the glass table top which never stains and which may be cleaned in an instant. Of course, one must be careful in setting hot dishes directly on the glass, but a few substitutes will solve that difficulty, and leave the clean glass surface for use.

No one who has ever used glass measuring cups will ever again use aluminum or tin cups for that purpose, yet the metal ones are still found in a large number of homes. The same is true of the glass rolling pin, which may be filled with ice in order to keep pastry as cold as possible until it is ready for the oven.

Large and small glass jars, in legions, have their places on the kitchen and pantry shelves. They keep food materials as dry as possible, yet keep others from drying out, and add to the advantage of crockery containers, they are without even reading of labels.

What is the use of putting rice in a jar that must be so marked when the label is lost? It is better to put the rice in a jar that is marked, and which may be moved, if a glass jar would never be put in the same class, for it is not being made with removable glass shelves and these are of inestimable assistance in cleaning.

Of course, we must remember that glass is brittle, and cannot be treated with the freedom to which we subject tin or aluminum, but if we remember that it is a proven expansion which causes most of the breakage, much of it may be eliminated.

Most of the glass made for kitchen use is tough, and if handled with reasonable care will not easily be broken. If handled not too suddenly, and if the outside and in are heated at the same time, the expansion will be uniform and the glass will remain whole.

Perhaps measured ware might be mentioned in the same class, for it is not points its treatment must be like that of glass. Most measured ware is a coating of glass-like material over a thin steel foundation.

If heated too quickly, or to too high a degree of dry heat, the outside glassy coating is very likely to chip off, and make the utensil unsafe for use. But if its composition is understood, the proper care will add many years to the life of both glass and enamel ware, and make safe all foods cooked in them.

Ice Cream Cake.

Crash one cup of butter, add one cup of sugar, gradually, one cup of eggs (one at a time), unbeaten, and beat each time until very light, then add one cup of milk alternately, with four cups of flour, one-fourth a teaspoonful of nutmeg, one teaspoonful of soda, and sifted together, add one teaspoonful of vanilla; beat thoroughly; bake in a large cake pan (thirteen by nine inches) about one hour in a moderate oven.

FROSTING.

Boil one cup and one-half of sugar and one-half a cup of water to 240° F.; pour in a fine stream on the whites of three eggs, beaten dry, beating constantly meanwhile; add one teaspoonful of vanilla; return to the fire, over boiling water, and beat until the frosting thickens perceptibly. Spread on the ice cream cake; decorate with seed red raisins and halves of blanched almonds.

Mocha Frosting.

Soften one-half a cup of butter, and add one cup and one-half of powdered sugar, one teaspoonful of coffee, and one-fourth a cup of very strong coffee, made by boiling for twenty minutes two heaping tablespoonsful of fine-ground coffee in one-half a cup of water, keeping the quantity of water, and keeping the envelope closed, and without clearing the coffee while hot, and without clearing. If frosting is too soft, add more powdered sugar.

Former Kaiser William at His Exile Retreat.

Above is an exclusive photo of William Hohenzollern, former Kaiser of Germany, with his wife, the former Princess Hermine, striding through the village of Doorn on Good Friday, the anniversary of the funeral of the late former Kaiser. The bodyguard while usually alert gave scant attention to the lone individual in peasant attire who carried out his work as a workman's boy. This photo is by far the best yet taken. It shows very clearly the great changes that have taken place in the Kaiser's appearance.

Fused Quartz Will Bring Healing Light.

Dwelling houses equipped with windows through which healing violet rays of the sun will be strained; light and heat that bend around corners; ultra-violet rays directed into parts of the body hitherto inaccessible are made possible by a substance styled "Fused Quartz," perfected at the West Lynn Laboratories of the General Electric Co. by Ed. W. Berry of the Thomson Research Laboratory. Photo shows a tuning fork of clear fused quartz.

First Linen Clothes Dark.

First linen clothes, so costly that only kings and nobles could afford them, were dark and discolored, because the art of bleaching had not been learned in olden times.
